SM-45
Herring Creek
Valley Lee Private

circa 1790 - 1820

Herring Creek is significant as an example of late 18th century/early 19th century domestic architecture in St. Mary's County. Although the interior of the center hall, double pile plan house has been remodeled over the years, some of the original finishes remain intact. One of the original outbuildings is also located on the property and remains in good condition. The preservation of the historic setting of the building, which is surrounded by a working agricultural landscape, does much to enhance the historic character of the property.

The early ownership of Herring Creek remains unclear. By 1860, William H. Hebb possessed the property. Hebb may have purchased the house from an Allston, Guyther, or a Watts as per the deeds mentioned in the St. Mary's County Land Records. It also may be that he inherited the property. Notably, the tract "Herring Creek" is not specifically referenced in any of the deeds after 1831.

Herring Creek is located at the end of an unpaved road on the west side of McKays Beach Road near Valley Lee in St. Mary's County, Maryland. The one-and-a-half story house stands on a substantial tract of land which is bordered by Herring Creek on the west side. A small brick outbuilding, probably a smoke house, is located on the south side of the house, while four frame agricultural outbuildings stand to the west of the house. The house faces north with the gable roof oriented on an east/west axis.

Built sometime between 1790 and 1820, the main block of Herring Creek was originally a one-story, five-bay, frame structure with brick end walls and a basement. The end walls are of a 5/1 bond and have a pair of massive chimneys with a central pent. The main block of the house was later expanded with the addition of an upper half story lit by dormer windows. A one-story kitchen wing is attached to the east end of the house. The roof of the house is covered with slate. The exterior is now covered with beaded aluminum siding. The foundation appears to be continuous brick sealed with cement. A full basement is located underneath the house. Here a series of cement piers give the structure added support.

The north (main) elevation is pierced by a central entrance door flanked on either side by a pair of six-over-six sash windows. The entrance door surround consists of fluted pilasters which support a plain frieze. This Colonial Revival detail is not original to the house. A cement pad porch extends across the north elevation. The poured cement floor extends up to the exterior wall of the house except where three two-light windows pierce the house foundation, illuminating the basement. The porch roof is supported by a series of Doric columns. The upper half story of the main block is pierced by four dormers lit by six-over-six sash windows. To the east of the main block is a one-story, kitchen wing lit by two pairs of six-over-six sash windows. The roof is pierced by one dormer lit by a six-over-six sash window.

The east elevation of the main block is mostly obscured by the one-story kitchen wing. The gable end of the wing is pierced by three six-over-six sash windows on the first floor and one six-over-six sash window in the eave. An exterior brick chimney stands against the east wall of the wing. The eave of the main block is pierced by two narrow six-over-six sash windows flanked by exterior brick chimneys.

The south elevation of the wing is pierced by three six-over-six sash windows and one four-light-over-three-panel door. The roof of this wing is pierced by a dormer window lit by one six-over-six sash window. The main block of the house has a central entrance door flanked by two six-over-six sash windows on either side. The door is Prepare both a summary paragraph of significance and a general statement of history and support.

Although the interior of the center hall, double pile plan house has been remodeled over the years, some of the original finishes remain intact. One of the original outbuildings is also located on the property and remains in good condition. The preservation of the historic setting of the building, which is surrounded by a working agricultural landscape, does much to enhance the historic character of the property.

The early ownership of Herring Creek remains unclear. By 1860, William H. Hebb possessed the property. Hebb may have purchased the house from an Allston, Guyther, or a Watts as per the deeds mentioned in the St. Mary's County Land Records. It also may be that he inherited the property. Notably, the tract "Herring Creek" is not specifically referenced in any of the deeds after 1831.

Herring Creek does not appear to be included in the Federal Direct Tax of 1798. The list does describe a house of "48' by 26' one story of wood and brick" occupied by William Hebb Junior. The true dimensions of Herring Creek are 47 1/4' by 28,' very close to those of the structure described in the tax list. Yet, the Hebb house is located in St. George's Hundred on the St. Mary's River. Herring Creek would have been described as located in the Poplar Hill Hundred and on the Potomac River or on the creek.

The architectural evidence exposed at Herring Creek suggests no conclusive building date. No wrought nails are visible, although a wrought metal spike employed to reinforce a down brace and sill connection can be seen from the basement. From the attic, the rafters appear to rest on a flat false plate, rather than a titled one. The bond of the brick outbuilding and the gable ends of the dwelling are 5/1 bond, suggesting a date somewhere between the late eighteenth century and 1840. From the west gable end elevation a seam in the brickwork shows that the house was enlarged from one-story to one-and-a-half stories at some point in its history.

St. Mary's County
7.1 Description

finished with a Colonial Revival style surround with four-light sidelights. A screened porch with a cement pad floor extends across the full width of this elevation. The porch roof is supported by Doric columns. The upper half story of the house is pierced with three dormers lit by six-over-six sash windows.

The west elevation of the main block is finished with a pair of exterior chimneys with a one-story pent between them. Two six-over-six sash windows pierce the upper half story of the elevation. A seam in the brick, visible on this elevation, shows where the house was raised in height from one-story to one-and-a-half stories. A modern shed roof addition is located to the south of the southern chimney. The addition is pierced by a door on the west side which provides access to the basement.

The basement of the house reveals that many of the original floor joists have been replaced over time. Some of the floorboards bear reciprocal saw marks. A pair of substantial hewn beams bisect the house, extending from the north to the south elevation. These beams have been pegged together. A down brace which probably supports a corner post is half lapped and pegged into one of these beams. The brace is also held in place by a wrought metal spike.

The interior of the main block was originally constructed with a center hall, double pile plan. Entrance doors on both the north and south elevations of the house open onto the central entrance hall. A dog-leg stair is located in the northeast corner of the hall. The open string stair has rectangular balusters, a molded handrail, and an octagonal newel post. A pattern of wood panels with beaded surrounds decorates the exterior of the stair and a six-panel door opens to a closet underneath the stair. A pair of French doors open off of the central hall to the large parlor on the west side of the house. The wall which originally divided this large room into two smaller rooms has been removed. Two alcoves of varying sizes, now fitted with shelves, project into the the west wall of the room. These alcoves were originally closets which opened into the chimney pent. A second pair of French doors open from the hall into the southeast parlor. From this room, the northwest parlor is accessible. Most of the first floor woodwork, including the mantels, have been replaced.

The hall stair consists of one flight which leads to a landing, and a second flight which leads from the landing to the second floor hall. Both flights are finished with the same finely worked baluster. The woodwork which composes the stair's wall stringer and skirting is original, consisting of a plain panel surmounted by an astragal. The landing is finished with a boldly molded chair rail. The chair rail consists of a fascia surmounted by a large astragal and an ogee

The attic reveals circular sawn rafters which are mitred at the apex of the roof. Both machine cut and wire nails are in evidence here. The rafters appear to rest on a flat false plate. A series of boards, some of them old beaded weatherboards, extends vertically from the apex of the roof to the tie beams below. A second series of boards extends diagonally from the center of the rafters to the tie beam. Some of these boards are old beaded weatherboards as well.

The kitchen wing consists of one room on the first floor and one room on the second floor. Currently, there is no access from the first floor of the kitchen to the bedroom above. According to one of the previous owners, access to the bedroom over the kitchen was only possible by means of an exterior stair.

The outbuilding located on the south side of the house is an eleven foot square brick building with a 5/1 bond. The building has a pyramidal roof covered with wood shingles. The floor and foundation consist of a cement pad. The exterior walls are capped by a corbeled cornice and a six light window pierces both the east and west elevations. The windows and a door opening on the north side are surmounted by jack arches. The interior walls and ceiling of the building are covered by modern materials.

Two granaries and two barns are located to the west of the house. The barn closest to the house is sheathed with vertical board siding and roofed with corrugated metal. The second barn, used to house livestock, is sheathed with weatherboard siding and roofed with asphalt shingles. The north wall of the barn has been infilled with cinderblocks. The first floor of the barn is divided into stables while the loft is filled with hay. The two granaries are both sheathed with vertical boards and supported by concrete piers. The roofing material consists of metal and asphalt shingles. The lumber in all of these outbuildings is circular sawn. A dilapidated wood water tower supported by a metal frame is located in the center of this cluster of structures.

Research conducted by Hope Grace has shown that John Shadrick purchased the interest of James Hopewell, Anna Hebb, and Thomas Lane Emory Junior in 100 acres of Herring Creek and 22 acres of Guyther's Addition during the year 1815. In each of the three deeds to Shadrick, the property purchased is described as property formerly owned by Pollard Hopewell. The 1798 Federal Direct Tax lists Pollard Hopewell's heirs as owning and occupying a one-story frame dwelling house.

A deed to Henry Watts from Robert Crane in 1801 describes a transfer of 100 acres of Herren's Creek and 31 acres of Smoots Marsh (TH 25/246). A deed of 1799 to Henry Watts from John Crane (TH 25/163) describes a transfer of 100 acres of Herring Creek and 30 acres of Smoots Marsh. In both deeds the property is described as that formerly owned by Thomas Crane. Crane does not appear in the 1798 Federal Direct Tax.

Herring Creek is a 1 1/2 story house.
 Both gables are brick with two large chimneys on the outside thereof. A porch roof juts out over the front facade. The house is similar to St. Mary's Manor and almost as well cared for.
